WILL MUSSOLINI ACCEPT COMPROMISE?

Rome, Italy.—Because preservation of the League of Nations is Italy's only guarantee of protection for her far flung colonies, she seems willing to go to the limit in preventing Italy from flouting her. As warning she has dispatched a large portion of her fleet to the Mediterranean. This twinge of the lion's tail seems to have its effect on Mussolini, who announces that he will be willing to accept a compromise on the Ethiopian situation. Though this is indeed a forward step it remains to be seen if an agreement can be reached which will give Italy just enough control in Ethiopia and not much.

TRANSATLANTIC PILOT FORCED DOWN

Baltimore, Md.—The transatlantic flight of the fall, up to a happy if not successful termination. Felix Wankus, 28-year-old American pilot of Miss America II set out from Floyd Bennett Field in New York for London. Insufficient gas and adverse weather conditions, however, caused him to make a forced landing in a field about a mile from Baltimore.

HOT POTATOES

Washington, D. C.—Sinking potatoes caused Republican and Democratic congressmen to introduce an amendment to the 1935 Cultural Adjustment Act which would for strict regulation of farmer's potato crop. To Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and his staff the law seemed a nightmarish. The Secretary applied for $10,000 to pay potato sleuths. Controller General John R. Ladd announced that the enforcement money could not be appropriated without Congress's specific approval. Secretary Wallace promptly repealed the hot potato law, and citizens and press subsided.

ELTY RISES IN DEPRESSION

London, England.—One of the serious manifestations of the depression has been the increased misery to children. Britain's National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children breaks down investigations of some 44,886 cases in its report of the 51st year's work. About 89% represented neglect, while the balance were cases of sadistic cruelty by parents or other adults. English socialists and that hungry, depressed parents often vent their rage on their own children.

A SAFE PLACE

New York City, N. Y.—Joseph S. Stole $500 in cash and bonds from his mother, Judge Lester W. Stole sentenced him to from 10 years to life as a fourth offender. Kraus's mother, who paid the charges, explained "I care anything about the certificate. But I want him in a safe place. Then he won't kill anyone he threatens, and won't die in the electric chair."

ABSORBED

Pleasant, Iowa.—State Representative Hubert Utterback turned on the radio as he drove his car. He explained the program to be "I was listening to a radio by Mrs. Alex Miller, State Highway Safety." Utterback had driven through a red signal.

OTHER DANCE

Fashioned and Modern THEL GRANGE HALL FRIDAY, OCT. 4 Jordan's Orchestra

STANDARD TIME AGAIN BEGINNING NEXT SUNDAY

The official change to standard time takes place at 2 a. m. on Sunday, Sept. 29. In most cases this will consist of setting back one's timepiece an hour before going to bed Saturday night, and so recovering the 60 minutes lost last spring when daylight saving was adopted.

BETHEL GRANGE

The Bethel Grange met in regular session on Thursday evening, September 19, with 28 members and visitors in attendance. The third and fourth degrees were conferred upon Mrs. Elizabeth Griffin. About 200 people attended the Old-Fashioned Dance, held at the Grange Hall on Friday evening, September 20. Jordan's Orchestra furnished the music, and all appeared to be enjoying the occasion.

CLASS REUNION—G. A. 1913

A very pleasant gathering met Sunday, Sept. 22d, when the Class of 1913, Gould Academy, was invited to the beautiful cottage of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Abbott on Twitchell Pond in Greenwood.

Those present from the class: Ralph Abbott, wife and children, Mechanic Falls; Eva Bean, Hartford, Conn.; Sylvia Swan Conroy, husband and son, Berlin, N. H.; Ruth Farrington Ring, husband and two daughters, Locke Mills; Arthur Cummings, wife and son, Auburn; Leroy Hamlin and wife, Upland, Bartlett, wife and baby, Edith Kimball Howe, Charles Thiel, Ralph Young, Alta Cummings Meserve, husband and two daughters, Bethel, O. W. Meserve, Mrs. May, Huntington, Locke Mills; Mrs. Knight, Bryant Pond; Joyce Cummings, Locke Mills and Christine Pinkham, Albany.

A most delightful time was enjoyed with picnic lunch and hot coffee served by the hostess. After lunch all gathered about the open fire and many incidents of school and dormitory life were recalled. Those absent were all spoken of and we wished that many more could have been present. These reunions are such pleasant ones that it seems as though they might be held more often and more might be present although some are living quite far away.

All went away feeling most grateful to Mr. and Mrs. Abbott for their gracious hospitality and feeling happier for these few hours spent with old friends and their families.

MRS. A. R. MERRILL

Mrs. Flora Lillian Merrill, who passed away September 19, 1935 after a few days illness was the daughter of Marion and Emily Marsh Babbs of Dixfield and was born in Dixfield, November 18, 1861. She married A. R. Merrill and several children were born before the family moved to the farm known as the Peter Powers place. Two children were born at this place Mrs. Merrill had been as well as usual. She attended the Oxford County Fair, Saturday, where she was taken ill. She was tenderly cared for by her son's wife and her daughters during the short illness. Mrs. Merrill is survived by her husband; two sisters, Mrs. Nettie Merrill, wife of Mr. J. W. Merrill, and Mrs. Elta Howard of Park Beach; a brother, Arthur L. Babbs of Mexico; two daughters, Mrs. Florence Curtis of East Bethel and Mrs. Inez Thurlow of Hildonville; seven sons, Joseph, Walter and Freeman of Bethel, Lewis and Hest of North Bridgton, Wilder and Thomas of South Paris; 26 grand-children and two great-grand-children, besides other more distant relatives.

The services were held in the church at East Bethel and interment was in the East Bethel cemetery. The floral tributes were many and beautiful.

Mrs. Ray Crockett was in Rumford on Wednesday.

GOULD FOOTBALL SCHEDULE COMPLETE

Mexico Plays Here October 5th—Practice Game With Local Group Saturday

On Saturday the Gould Academy 1935 edition of pigskin toters will engage a team composed of local players, in a practice tilt. Hinkley, Clifford, Al. Chapman and Bill Wright will be part of the crew acting as opponents.

The following is the season's schedule beginning with Mexico High at Bethel.

Sat., Oct. 5—Mexico at Bethel.

Sat., Oct. 12—at Bridgton.

Sat., Oct. 19—at Norway.

Wed., Oct. 23—So. Paris at Bethel.

Sat., Nov. 2—at Farmington.

Prospects

The men (a squad of about 20) have been working now for about two and a half weeks. The team will be exceptionally light and many of the men have had no experience. Some have not even played football before. The squad however is working hard and with a few good veterans on deck the team should be able to put up a good scrap. Bob Browne and Mundi, both veterans of three seasons of football, will be fighting their fourth campaign. Browne at quarterback and Mundi at end. The other end position will probably be held by Robertson a light inexperienced man but one who has plenty of fight. The tackle position will be handled by the veteran Conledge and two men who are more or less inexperienced in varsity play, Moore and Lovejoy. Lovejoy is showing up exceptionally well in his first year at the game.

The guard positions will be filled by men with little or no experience but who are doing well in practice. Murray Thurston a freshman and Holt, a Junior, Dale Thurston will handle the center position and should fill it well especially on offense.

In the backfield with Browne calling signals will be Daniels at fullback and Stiles at half. The other backfield position will be filled by either Wentzell, Onofrio or Parker Brown, a Freshman. Wentzell has had no experience but is showing up well this past week. Onofrio is a man of some experience and can be used either as fullback or at halfback.

Others who are showing promise are Stanley Galkant, an end; Hastings, a guard; Littlehale, a backfield man; and Rodney Howe a guard. Others who are out are Wheeler, Percy, Smith, D. Brooks and A. Whitman.

GOLD FRESHMAN RECEPTION AT GYM FRIDAY EVENING

The annual freshman reception will take place in the William B. Thayer Gymnasium Friday evening at eight o'clock. Specialties for this occasion include two short dramatics, "Yes and No" by Mrs. Bates and "On the Park Bench" by Mrs. Dane. "Yes and No" is a melodrama, the characters are "He" and "She" namely Robert Brown and Betty Raynes. The first dramatic question to be settled in the play is "Can 'She' say anything to 'He'?" "On the Park Bench" is a short comedy about a well-dressed young couple who meet on a park bench and chat about society and their careers. Robert Brown and Dwight Stiles are the young couple. Pauline Lee, Betty Raynes, Henry H. Hinkley and Richard Young are also in the cast. Both of these performances are under the direction of Mrs. Ruth Leavitt, Director of Dramatics at Bethel.

According to Donald E. Merriam, director of the National Youth Administration in Maine, about 500 Maine students will be enabled to continue their education in Maine schools and colleges with the help of the Administration's program.

TRAIN TIME TO CHANGE SUNDAY

Beginning next Sunday the time of the morning west bound train at Bethel will be 10.31 instead of 10.16, and the east bound afternoon train 4.52 instead of 4.27.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH MUSICAL SERVICE

On Sunday morning the Congregational Church are to have the pleasure of having as their guests Miss Helen Eastman and her Chorus-Ensemble from Berlin, N. H., to conduct the musical service. Through the kindness of Mrs. F. L. Edwards this visit has been arranged.

The program of selections is as follows:

Send Out Thy Light. Gounod

The Wayide Cross. Palmer

Tenor Solo. Mr. Paulson, accompanied by male chorus

Tenor solo.

Olton Hutchinson

Solo. Miss Helen Eastman

All will be welcome at the service, which will be held at 11 o'clock, standard time.

BIRTHDAY SURPRISE

The Ladies Aid met last Thursday afternoon, Sept. 19, at the home of Mrs. Anna Harlan with 15 members present. The program included a roll call of birthstones and their meanings and a very interesting paper on Maine given by Mrs. Florence Hamlin. This being Mrs. Harlan's 82d birthday, her guests surprised her with a card shower, and refreshments of ice cream and birthday cake.

Boston Mother Tells a Secret

How do you keep your children nice and healthy? This question pleases Mrs. McKay, who now tells her neighbors: "I happened to hear about

Dr. True's Elixir

Laxative Round Worm Expeller

through a relative—as my little boy was for some time troubled with loss of appetite, restlessness at night and at times was very fretful, I decided to try Dr. True's Elixir. He began to improve immediately and in a very short time he was well. I would never be without it."—Mrs. E. G. McKay, 429A Saratoga St., Boston, Mass.

Signs of Round Worms are: Constipation, deranged stomach, swollen upper lip, offensive breath, hard and full stomach with pains, pale face, eyes heavy, short dry cough, grinding of the teeth, etc.

Dr. True's Elixir laxative round worm expeller—made from imported herbs—mild and pleasant to take—for children and adults.

THE CANDLE IN THE KITCHEN WINDOW

William Wood

A light is in the window,
Just a common candle light;
But Tommy on the turnpike
Was dancing with delight
The little light was talking
For a little blue-eyed girl.
And Tommy's heart was throbbing,
And his head was all awhirl!
It said, "I love you, Tommy,
My heart is all aflutter,
So hurry, hurry, Tommy,
To spend awhile with me!
The folks are in the parlor,
The way is clear, you see;
And no one here but Fido
And the kitty cat with me!
The candle light was saying,
With clear and beaming ray,
"She loves, she loves you, Tommy,
Far more than I can say!"
The age-old spell was on him,
Anthrillating miles,
The magnet of a maiden's heart,
And witchery of smiles!
And all the world enraptures
With the pure and sweet delight
That Tommy read distinctly
In that kitchen candle light.

BELATED GOODNESS

William Wood

At seventy, who would not undo
The "Follies of his youth"?
The unkind word, the cutting joke,
The half-disguised untruth?
Who would not call his loved ones back.
Greet them, apologize
For wrongs committed by him,
Bringing tears to kindly eyes?
The little things we did not do
To cheer them by the way;
Our thoughtless negligences
React on us to-day!
They hurt us more than we hurt them.
The rebound is severe!
The penalty for "Little Sins"
Does not escape us here:
Right here and now is Judgment
Day!
We try hard to forget,
But memory keeps strict account.
We have to recollect;
Yet areas of peace exist
To cheer long as one lives;
The wronged ones entertained no grudge, and God Himself forgives.
We cherish in our heart of hearts
A love too late expressed;
May God forgive us here and now,
And they be richly blessed!

THE AVERAGE AMERICAN

William Wood

Tranquil amid the noisy crowd,
Unseen, unknown to fame;
Outside his own community
Few ever hear his name.
One of the many millions he,
Unnoticed humans too,
He develops normally,
And everywhere rings true.
Joy and sorrow are his lot,
A mingled cup his wine;
Adversity Success? They surge
His heart like waves of brine.
He labors, rests, and plays a bit.
Heart, mind, are crystal clear;
He breaks no laws but stands foursquare.
For all esteemed most dear,
He cherishes The Good Old Book,
The Church and Sunday School,
Walks in the altitudes with God,
And works the Golden Rule.
No monument is raised for him
In parks or marts of strife;
But luminous his record shows
In God's own Book of Life.
And what, in place, or wealth, or fame,
The things the crowd pursues,
That catch the eye of columnists
So keen for daily "news,"
Obscure he lived and died, indeed!
Forgotten? Never known!
Except to a discerning few
On whom his virtues shone.
Industrious and honest too,
Of folly's ways no devotee;
For work that counts and social worth.
No nobler citizen could be,
Not in the hectic haunts of men
Is honor to him given;
But in his little, hidden nook
He caught The Eye of Heaven.

FOUR HEBREW PRINCES

D. S. BROOKS

Chapter 2

Some of my readers have already wondered, what part, if any, the four Hebrew princes played in the startling drama of that awful night mentioned in the previous chapter: I could write a volume of reading matter equal to the contents of this paper, magazine section included, on what I believe they did: to a logical finish. But I will not tire you with so long a narrative. In this issue we will speak of them as Daniel and his friends. In a later chapter, we will mention their individual names, which have very significant meanings.

We do not know that our heroes were blood related. Yet they belonged to four of the best families in Jerusalem; and were gifted with all the qualities of royalty; thus the group name of "princes." My story runs on like a novel, but the main features are strikingly Biblical.

On the night in question, these young fellows entered loyally into rescue work. Many aged folk, as well as children, owed their lives to their heroism. I will give an example: Jeremiah, the prophet-priest, had special duties to perform in the temple to a late hour. His homeward journey was fraught with great peril. The enemy swarmed the principle streets. And these horsemen rode with their swords drawn from their sheaths ready to strike down any and all pedestrians. The venerable prophet was nearing his home by King's Lane when a rader burst upon him and would have thrust him through had it not been for the timely intervention of our quartet of young men. They, seeing the danger, rushed to the priest and catching him into their strong arms bore him speedily away between two buildings where the cavalryman could not enter. In due time, dodging this way and that, they succeeded in taking the Godly man to his humble dwelling. Then back into the danger zone they went; giving great assistance to the sufferers and the dying. They so strongly opposed the enemy that in the early morning watch they were surrounded and captured and immediately started on their journey with many other choice specimens of young manhood to walk the entire distance of seven hundred miles to Babylon, the city of the great heathen king—Nebuchadnezzar. They were escorted by a strong armed force: to prevent their rescue by relatives and friends; and left the town by the Gate of Benjamin.

Jerusalem had a population numbering about three and one half times that of our little city of Bethel, N. H. This will give you a somewhat better idea of its size. There were times, however, when special festivals were held, that its streets were too crowded for comfort; when Jews returned to worship who had taken residence in other countries; and aliens and merchants that are always attracted whenever a national holiday is celebrated.

Returning to the closing scene of chapter one, we ask, "Is it any wonder that the broken-hearted prophet lay upon his face and could not speak?" He had learned of the kidnapping of those boys who were so dear to his heart.

Before closing this chapter, we must add that Jeremiah is one of the outstanding characters of the Old Testament. His writings are tinged with stern reproaches and frightful prophecies. He was a faithful seer and endured great persecution. Now the time is at hand once more, (history will repeat itself) when real Christian people must pass through great persecution for bearing witness to the Truth. God's clock is striking that hour! Don't mock at my words, as those ancients did at Jeremiah's book;—for verily these things are going to take place as certain as sunset follows the midday sun. Do not allow yourself to be lulled to sleep by soft and soothing words. Beware of false prophets! There are many ministers in our day who are not divinely commissioned to preach. They are "hirelings" and not shepherds. The Word of God will instruct you. Read it!—Study it!—Believe it!

As we conclude this chapter, we will allow Daniel and his large company of school friends a full month and a half to make their long, tiresome journey. For they will be footsore; and other difficulties may also make the trip very arduous and distracting, together with their grieving hearts. While they are on their way, we will give a chapter headed "War Clouds," which has to do with that ancient world and also with the happenings of the present time.

WOODSTOCK HIGH SCHOOL

The literary club which was formed at Woodstock High School last year has been reorganized with the following officers:

President—Paul Cole
Vice President—Helyi Heikkinen
Secretary—Harland Abbott
Treasurer—Doris Coffin
Librarian—Helen Vittum

The purpose of this club is to purchase books and provide entertainment of educational value for its members.

The club held its second meeting of this year on Thursday, September 19. George Howe of Norway was present and spoke on the subject of mineralogy.

The credit for forming this club is due to its president, Paul Cole, a member of the Senior class. About 30 students have joined the literary club this year.

The annual Freshman Reception at Woodstock High School was held Friday evening, September 20. The Freshmen paraded down the main street of the village and then back to the school auditorium where they entertained a large audience with stunts of various kinds. After the stunts refreshments were served and there was a short social. The senior class wishes to thank Rev. James MacKillop for his help and cooperation in making the reception such a success.

BRYANT POND

The funeral services for Joseph Roberts were held at Andrews' Funeral Home on Friday afternoon at two o'clock, conducted by Rev. James McKillop, pastor of the Baptist Church, Bryant Pond.

The Freshman reception was held Friday night in the High School Building. The Freshies were real sports and seemed to enjoy the fun as much as anyone. Ice cream and cake was served to a large crowd after the reception.

51,200 CORPSES

In the eighteen months that ended June 30, 1935, 51,200 persons met death in motor car crashes in this country. More than 1,300,000 were injured.

The bare statistics, thought provoking though they are, cannot give an adequate picture of the horror of major automobile accidents. Figures—mangled bodies—crushed skulls—obliterated features—decapitated bodies—and all the rest of the results of fatal motor crashes. Nor can figures picture the tragedy of parentless children and broken hearted dependents of recklessly driven cars.

In a recent article in Readers' Digest, F. C. Furness wrote: "A first class massacre is only a question of scale and numbers—seven corpses are no deader than one.
Each shattered man, woman or child who went to make up the 36,000 corpses checked up last year had to die a personal death."

That is worth thinking about next time you take the wheel of your car. Driving at excessive speeds may, if you get away with it, save you ten minutes in a fifty-mile run.
If you don't get away with it, it may mean your death, or the death of an innocent party. Passing on hills and curves, weaving through thick traffic and taking other chances may save you a minute or two more —or it may mean a crushed body on the pavement, its bones twisted and broken, its eyes staring and sightless.

It's up to you—to everyone who drives a car. Is recklessness worth its horrible cost?

First U. S. Naval Fleet

Was Organized in 1775

The first U. S. naval fleet was organized in December, 1775, by act of congress, and Essek Hopkins was made commander of the fleet, consisting of two 24-gun frigates, the Alfred and the Columbus, and two brigs, the Andrea Doria and the Cabot. These were all purchased by the committee of congress and armed for use as war vessels while the naval construction program was being carried out, observes a writer in the Detroit News. This called for vessels to be built in New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Pennsylvania and Maryland.

Joshua Humphreys, called the "Father of the American Navy," was our first real warship builder. As a ship carpenter in Philadelphia he built many splendid vessels for service against the British, and before its close gained wide recognition as the ablest and most skillful naval architect of his time. He was appointed the first naval constructor in 1794, serving until 1801, and built such vessels as the Constitution, Chesapeake, Constellation, Congress, President and United States.

The first warship of American construction to enter European waters was the 16-gun brig Reprisal which on December 4, 1776, conveyed Benjamin Franklin to France to obtain French assistance.

Bills of Every Individual. National and International Problems, Inseparable from Local Welfare.

Congress has adjourned, and a great quiet has come over Washington. Theoretically, the political "open season" has ended, and will not begin again until the next Congress, which will convene with the start of the new year. Actually, however, politics never ends—and during the present brief "breathing spell" between sessions, laymen and publicists alike are spending most of their time speculating on what is going to happen in next year's campaign, and the campaign of 1940.

Principal question at issue is this: "What changes, if any, have occurred in the status of Roosevelt popularity since 1932?" By way of answer, you can get almost anything you want. It is a human frailty, shared alike by Republicans and Democrats, to regard a thing as being true simply because you wish it were true. As a result, political opinions on forthcoming campaigns must be weighed exceedingly carefully—they are dictated almost entirely by partisan bias. The Democratic spokesman will tell you that Mr. Roosevelt will sweep the field as completely in '36 as he did in '32—the Republican spokesman will tell you that he will lose, and that the GOP will come back after the worst four years of its history.
More or less unbiased observers,
who are not tarred with any party label will tell you that both of these extreme views are wrong.

One of the best obtainable gauges for measuring the popularity or lack of it of any Administration, is newspaper editorial opinion. And in this, according to an article by Theodore C. Wallen, of the New York Herald-Tribune, a very interesting change has taken place.
During the past turbulent year, on November 1, 1934—the eve of the congressional election in which the Democrats achieved an astounding sweep—70% of the American editorial opinion was favorable to the President. He held this degree of of popularity until early in March.
Then a decline, marked by a few upturns, started. The course of the popularity chart, Mr. Wallen says, went from 67% to 68, back to 62, then to 47, then to 66, then to 42 and finally to 61 on April 29. The greatest decline followed, when, on the occasion of the President's attack on the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, principal representative organization of American industry, it fell—plunged to 21.

Papers which were once highly favorable to Mr. Roosevelt and his policies, have become cold and non-committal. Papers which once were uncertain and said little, have taken to denouncing Administration acts. And some very important papers, which normally back Democratic Administrations—such as the New York Times and the Baltimore Sun—find much to criticize in the President's program.

In his article, Mr. Wallen makes another very important observation. At the beginning of the Roosevelt administration, many persons backed the President and at the same time were against Administration measures in general. In other words, they liked the President, and they blamed others for Administration acts and policies they believed inimical to the national welfare. Newspapers followed a similar course. When the President's popularity line hit its spring low of 21, Mr. Wallen says,
"this apparently was the first time
President Roosevelt and his Administration had come to stand for the same thing in the editorial opinion of the United States."

The drop in the President's popularity as a statesman—which is a very different matter than his popularity as an individual—has given unbiased writers the belief that the GOP has a chance—even though remote—to win in 1936, if it puts the right man forward. And there is a great problem. The Republican party is pretty well split up in factions. The progressives, led by Senators La Follette and Norris, do not want a conservative candidate. The conservatives, under the Hoover leadership, are bitter against present radical trends.
Some think that the best candidate would be Senator Borah—but the Idaho lion has passed the biblically allotted span of life, and that is a great barrier to his candidacy.
Colonel Knox of Chicago is making a bid for nomination—but he is relatively unknown outside of a few big cities. Senator Vandenberg is another figure to be reckoned with —but he too faces much coldness within his party. Senator McNary has influence as Republican leader in the Senate—but he comes from a small and remote state.

A few think that the Republican campaign of 1936 should be only formal—that the party should work toward 1940. They point to Mr. Roosevelt's electoral victory over Mr. Hoover, and say that shift enough to elect a Republican cannot occur in four years. Others point out that Mr. Hoover's margin over Governor Smith was only slightly less great than Roosevelt's over Hoover—that the tide turned then, and that it can again.

Under any circumstances, the next campaign will be bitterly fought. The issues are many, but the outstanding question for the voters to consider is whether to continue the swing to the left or turn back to the right. There will be no quarter given by either side.
And a great deal can happen in the year that must pass before votes are counted.

The gas tax total in the State
this year to Aug. 31, is $3,113,045-10, an increase over the first eight months of 1934 of $108,462.68.

INDIAN MYSTIC PUZZLES SCIENTISTS

Carshalton, England—A small group of eminent English scholars and scientists including a professor of surgery and Harry Price, world's champion fake-medium baiter, gathered at Carshalton in Surrey to watch Kuda Bux, an Indian mystic, perform the "Ordeal by Fire." With bare feet he walked slowly and unscathed over the glowing embers of fire 12 feet by 6 that had been burning in a trench for eight hours and stoked with seven tons of oak logs. Two medical students who tried to duplicate the stunt leaped howling from the trench with severe burns. The scientists were im-puzzled. But Joseph Dunninger, professional New York magician, pointed out that many Oriental fakirs performed this trick by digging the trench shallower in the middle where it would go out more quickly, so that they really shuffled in cool ashes while the fire still burned brightly at the sides.

MONEY-MAKER CAPTURED

Union City, N. J.—Last year the Treasury reported an all-time high in counterfeit money—$1,214,279. A large percentage of it seemed to have come from the same skilled hand. "T-men" arrested his aid, slippery "Count" Lustig, but he told no tales, finally escaped from a New York jail. At last they managed to track down the "master-mind." At 7 A. M. in a tiny flat in Union City they walked quietly in on William Watts, a bald, harmless-looking little man, surrounded by his tools and $63,000 in crisp counterfeit bills. America's criss-cross counterfeiter, who used to be a small-town druggist, was captured.

JAPAN'S PLANS WORRY LEAGUE

Tokyo—When Japan received a few small South Sea Islands as Mandates she promised not to fortify them. Now the League of Nations Mandates Commission is disturbed to learn that Masao Hayashi, Governor of the islands, intends to present a plan for their development calling for $9,967,000. Japan claims that her interest is commercial, but Tokyo's naval strategists admit that the archipelagoes constitute a first line of defense, straddling or commanding all principal American trade routes to the Orient. They would furnish many good military airports and submarine bases.

YEAR'S 13TH LYNCHING

Oxford, Miss.—U. S. lynchings to date number 13. Last year in the same period they were 14. All-time lynching record was 231 in 1892.
This year's thirteenth occurred when the jury deliberated too long over the fate of Ellwood Higgenbottom, 23-year-old Negro accused of murdering a white planter. The mob broke into the jail, overpowered the sheriff and three deputies, hung Higgenbottom from a tree two miles out of town.

RECOVERY CHEERS FOREIGN SERVICE

Washington, D. C.—No major government branch was hit harder by the depression than the Foreign Service. American representatives abroad suffered 15% salary cuts, curtailed expense accounts, dollar devaluation, and virtually no promotions. Now they breathe easily again with Secretary Hull's announcement of promotions and salary raises for 280 foreign representatives, appointment of 43 new members to the Service, and assumption of regular examinations for new candidates.

NAZIS RELEASE KIDNAPED JOURNALIST

Paris, France—Last March Nazis kidnaped Berthold Jacob, a German-Jewish journalist from Switzerland. Swiss protests failing, the Bernese Government finally listed the case for arbitration. To avoid publicity of Nazi espionage, Germany has at last released him. Flooded by reporters, Jacob has retired to his house without making any statement. His wife announced he suffered no physical torture, but has collapsed under the strain of being constantly in fear for his life.

AUSTRALIAN BALLOT

Two towns, Poland and bunkport, used the Australian lot this year for the first time.
Queries to the respective clerks elicited responses of satisfaction in the workings

To quote Alice B. Mitchell, puty clerk of the Town of

How America Answers Her Critics

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

We have been hearing a lot of criticism lately concerning our American methods and principles. For a while the detractors were content to sneer at our art, our literature, our simple recreations and measures. More recently, however, they have broadened their scope, today their hardest attacks are directed—often from within—at our democratic form of government, with its effective guarantees of freedom and opportunity for all. They favor, instead, certain European patterns which vest all power in a highly centralized government rather than in the people.

Such criticism has not gone unheeded. It is bearing greater fruit than many of us realize. Its arguments resound from the stump. Its influence appears in much of our legislation.

How can we combat it? One method is to apply the acid test of realism. Why not turn to our critics and ask:

"Under what other form of government have a free people developed the wilderness into a nation as vast, as wealthy, as productive as the United States?"

"Under what other form of government have citizens attained as high a standard of income, of living, of general well-being as has been enjoyed by successive generations of Americans?"

"What other government has offered to its poorest boys such opportunities to rise to the height of their capacity as are illustrated by the careers of Lincoln and Edison?"

"What other government has acceded to all its citizens—to the vast as well as to the greatest—the political power guaranteed under our American Constitution?"

And finally:

"How many of these advantages are offered to the average man by the modern European forms of government—with all their planned economy, their regimentation and their strong central authorities dictating to every citizen how he shall labor, how he shall live, how he shall think?"

When—and only when—the critics answer these questions to our satisfaction should we take their proposals seriously.

When—and only when—they can show that the men who work and live are better off in other lands than in our own, should we consider scrapping our constitutional guarantees for their un-American theories and projects.

Our heritage of freedom and opportunity is far too precious to swap for a mess of foreign pottage.

First Mosaic Ceilings

The ceilings in the Department of Justice building were made by placing particles of colored sand in plastic concrete. These are the first mosaic ceilings ever designed in architectural concrete. The seven floors of the building comprise about 25 acres. Within the building are about two miles of corridors, ten principal stairways and 29 elevators. On the seventh floor of the Justice building may be found the world's finest crime laboratory. Here, keeping tabs on the criminal population of the United States, F. Lee Sam maintains rooms for files of more than 4,000,000 fingerprints.

Famous Scientists Guide Great National Academy

The National Academy of Sciences, founded in 1863 during the Presidency of Abraham Lincoln, is a self-governing institution of America's leading scientists charged with the responsibility of making studies for the federal government. It is also empowered to receive and distribute funds to facilitate important research undertakings. In 1916, at the request of the President, the National Research Council was founded, under the charter of the National academy, for "the promotion and co-operative co-ordination of scientific research." The council engages actively in research promotion; it publishes many scientific monographs, and it maintains a number of research fellowships, the funds for which up to June 30, 1930, amounted to more than $3,000,000.

The government itself engages directly in research activities to an extent not generally realized. The bureau of standards holds a key position in this respect as it is responsible for the supervision of the national standards, upon which are based the thousand and one measures of industry and science, besides acting as the government's official agency for standardization and industrial research.

Estate and Inheritance Taxes

Estate and inheritance taxes are among the most ancient means of raising revenue for government. A death duty was collected more than 2,500 years ago in Egypt. Augustus introduced the tax in Rome for the support of his army more than 1,900 years ago. Some kind of estate or inheritance tax is collected in virtually every civilized country. An estate tax was imposed by our federal government as early as 1796. It was repealed five years later, to be reimposed during the Civil war and again to help pay for the Spanish war in 1898. Pennsylvania imposed a death duty in 1820 and this experiment has been followed by the great majority of the states.

Negroes Not Only Black or Dark-Skinned People

Negroes are by no means the only black or dark-skinned people, nor even the only black people of Africa. The Nubians and Hottentots are darker than some of the negroes of the elevated plateaus of Central Africa, says a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. But taking the term in its popular sense in this country, it may be said that the negro race is as old as history. Negroes were apparently unknown to the Greeks before the Seventh century B. C., but they were known to the Egyptians at least 2300 B. C., and are represented on Egyptian monuments of 1600 B. C., with all the distinctive features of the true Guinea negroes of our own times.

The importation of slaves to the United States was abolished by Constitutional provision in 1808. Slaves were smuggled into this country in a few instances after that time, the last cases occurring shortly before the Civil war. Since then there has been a considerable migration of negroes to the United States from the West Indies.

GOULD ACADEMY NOTES

Class officers for the seniors were recently elected as follows: President, Henry Hastings; Vice President, Dwight Stiles; Secretary, Phyllis Davis; Treasurer, Chester Wheeler.

Miss Olive Grover, Gould '30, and a graduate of Bates College in the Class of 1934, was a visitor on the campus last week-end. Miss Grover is engaged in social welfare work in the State of Maine.

The ring committee for the sophomore class consists of Helen Crouse, Nancy Philbrook, Donald Brown and Robert Keniston.

Members of the editorial board have commenced work on the fall issue of the "Academy Herald" and it is hoped to publish the number by Thanksgiving.

The Jay Bird

To fully describe the gaudy markings of the jay bird one must use the detailed plan of the scientists: Upper parts, including crest, light purplish blue; wings and tail, bright cobalt blue; some wing and tail feathers barred with black and tipped with white; side of head and throat white with purplish cast; breast and sides light gray, fading into white on the belly and beneath tail. Beak and feet, grayish black. Collar black with black figuring between eyes and white at base of the beak.

The Last Horse

By HAL G. VERMES
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNC Service.

HARRY the Pinhead spills his swill idea while we are at a little racetrack just this side of the Rio Grande where we are finding the greenbacks very scarce indeed. What Harry suggests is that we run a lottery just like the big one for the hospital fund on the Irish Sweeps.

"But," says Harry, "we will fix this pool so's everybody knows it is strictly on the level. Instead of a lottery on the hide what comes in first, this one will give a prize on the nag what comes in last!"

"That is positively perfect!" agrees Beezer Bertie. "We will sell 50,000 tickets at two bucks apiece which amounts to one hundred grand. Fifty per cent for prizes, 25 per cent for charity, and we will collect twenty-five grand ourselves for our trouble."

"That is it," says Harry. "We will put up a prize of 10,000 bucks for the horse what comes in last and divide up the forty grand into a lot of smaller prizes for the winning ticket holders."

We select a maiden event a month off which nobody has a idea what hide will win.

On racing day the little oval is mobbed with the gang what has bought tickets on our Last Horse Sweeps; and they are all much excited because nobody knows what hide will come in last. The two-year-olds what never won a race are lined up at the barrier; the bell bangs and they are off to a beautiful start.

The field goes pounding by us, takes the clubhouse turn, and runs for the back stretch. But then they do something which is very strange indeed. The pack is still running, but not so fast. When they reach the last turn, the ponies act like they are out of breath. Coming down to home stretch they slow down to a walk and fifty yards from the wire all the ponies stop and lay down!

Seeing we started the pool, the boys and me are sitting in the judge's stand and when this peculiar thing happens we are practically speechless. But then Harry figures it out.

"The purse for the hide what wins this race," he says thoughtfully like, "is only 1,000 bucks, while we are giving ten times that as a prize for the pony what comes in last. Therefore, none of the horse owners want their hide to come in first."

The crowd is laughing themselves sick at first, but after an hour goes by and we still cannot get the horses to move, it looks like we'll have a riot.

Then Harry gets another idea and calls up the owner of one of the ponies in the race. "We will contribute 10,000 bucks out of our share of this pool," he offers, "if you will have your horse finish the race."

To this the owner agrees. He then instructs his jockey and so the boy gets on the horse and walks him across the finish line. But the race is not yet over for the crowd does not care what horse comes in first; they are only interested in the lottery tickets they bought which gives prizes on the hide what ambles home last. So we are yet nowhere at all because the other nine ponies are still lying in the middle of the track and not caring nohow about nothing.

"Well," says one of the judges, "we will call the race off and you can return the money to the ticket holders."

But we do not want to do that because although we already have give away ten grand we still have fifteen grand profit left to us for all our work. And now Harry has a third idea. But first he asks the judges to announce that they will give the other horses just five minutes to ride home or lose the race by default.

Then we go down and Harry speaks to the jockeys in the middle of the stretch. "If none of you booters are going to ride across the finish line," he explains, "then we will consider that the hide what was first in this race is also last. He will therefore win both prizes as the front end of him come in first and the back end of him come in last. So now you smart boys can stay here all night and laugh that off!"

After Harry reads this ultimatum, the jockeys go into a very serious conference, and by the time we are back in the judges' stand, they are mounting their hides again. "Ah!" I exclaim. "At last they have made up their minds to finish this lunatic race so we will know who is the last horse to come in."

But it did not turn out like we think. After the jockeys get on their nags, they slowly amble down toward the wire. But they are not forgetting that the last horse to come in will win ten grand. So just before they reach home they line up, the jockeys hold each others' arms, and the whole nine hides ride across the finish line together!

And that is why instead of making ourselves twenty-five grand profit in this Last Horse Lottery, we instead lose nearly one hundred grand and my writing arm is very tired from signing I. O. U.'s, because the judges decide that as all the nine bangtalls come in last, they are each one entitled to the grand prize of $10,000!

Jackson Chose Site for U. S. Treasury Building

It is said that the architect of the Treasury building at Washington wished it to be set amid grounds commensurate with its dignity and beauty, instead of placing it upon the Capital's busiest thoroughfare. The story goes, however, says the Washington Star, that President Andrew Jackson, becoming impatient at the long delayed choosing of a site, finally stuck his cane into the ground one morning and said: "Build it here!"

It is the world's greatest depository of money and the government's "pin money" vault.

Objects of interest are shown in the corridors entered from Pennsylvania avenue. Among these are:

Keys used before the invention of combination locks; mutilated currency restored by Mrs. A. E. Brown, who spent 40 years in this work; Presidential, army, navy and other medals; illustrations of the process of making notes and coins; specimens of the macerator pulp; warrant and draft for payment to Russia for Alaska, with the famous Spinner signature; three warrants for payment for Panama canal strip, $40,000,000, $1,000,000 and $9,000,000, and the flag that draped Lincoln's box in Ford's theater on the night of the assassination.

GET MORE FARM DOLLARS

Home accounts kept by 75 Maine farm families show that the amounts spent for education and amusement this year increased more than any other items over the preceding year.

Clothing, health and home improvement also called for more money than these families spent for the same services the year before.

Edna M. Cobb, home management specialist in the Extension Service, says that the typical family keeping accounts produced home-grown foods valued at $267 this past year. Dairy products, meat and vegetables produced at home increased over the previous year, she says, and less food was purchased.

Farm women frequently fail to realize the saving in food costs that the home garden or flock brings. Miss Cobb points out, although home-grown foods often cut the grocery bill in half.

Women who keep records each year tell Miss Cobb that their account books help to plan next year's spending, even if analysis shows no ways to reduce total expenses.

The Farm Bureau held a meeting Tuesday of last week at the home of Mrs. Bertha Judkins. The subject was "Tomatoes Many Ways," Mrs. Mary Ladd and Mrs. Ruth Hastings of Bethel were the demonstrators.

The 4-H Club held a social at the Library Building, Saturday evening of last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Enman are receiving congratulations on the birth of a daughter, Shirley Ellen.

Miss Myrtle Pratt, who is teaching school at Sunday River, was home over the week end.

Ernest Buck and crew of Bethel are pressing hay in town. Some of the men are boarding with Mrs. Bertha Judkins; some of them are boarding themselves at Buck's camp.

The young folks gathered in a field near John Augvine's house Monday evening this week for a corn roast.

Motorized "Zipper" Houses of Tomorrow

Quakes Can't Hurt Them; Screw-Driven Can.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

POSSIBLY within five years—certainly within ten—our houses will be built around the machine, in the most literal sense of the term.

Our new houses will be pre-fabricated houses, manufactured on a mass-production basis that will bring the most scientifically modern of them within the reach of the family of moderate means, just as mass production has brought the automobile into millions of family garages.

Every new house will be a sort of "zipper" house whose parts can be "buttoned" together and "unbuttoned" again with the greatest of ease. All new houses will be of a pleasing simplicity of design. All will have flat roofs that will be so much more "living surface" in pleasant weather. All houses will be air-conditioned in all kinds of weather.

In the center of every house will be a compact, electrically driven motor unit which will furnish power for the hundreds of tasks which make housekeeping a chore today, will heat the house in winter and cool it in summer.

These are not idealistic fancies, framed in fragile smoke rings from the dream pipes of impractical social planning bugs. They are facts.

For such houses already exist, both individually and in communities. Their manufacture and design is being fostered by some of the biggest and most progressive industrial giants of the day.

Houses for Low Incomes.

For the principal strides in developing houses of this sort the credit must go to Owen D. Young, head of General Electric company, and to Foster Gunnison, president of Houses, Inc. Houses Inc., has been formed not to build houses, but to conduct research for the entire building trade "through which new ideas in home building will be tested and cleared and also to culture, assist in the management of, or help finance any worthy project designed to produce modern houses that will be within easy financial reach of those with low incomes."

Houses, Inc., has been subsidized by General Electric. Mr. Gunnison has been one of the leaders in the pre-fabricated housing movement. Motorized, pre-fabricated houses, already past the experimental stage, have been assembled at White Plains, N. Y., Garden City, L. I., New York city, Boston and Philadelphia. At Boston there is a whole colony of such houses which is visited by thousands of persons daily.

Purdue university, at Lafayette, Ind., for the administration of its new course, "The New Science of Better Living," is preparing to start a whole modern community to use as a gargantuan laboratory for the study of tomorrow's scientific housing.

David Ross, chairman of the board of trustees of the university, has donated 143 acres of land where the new village will be assembled. Here every house will be subjected to extreme temperatures and weather conditions, and even man-made earthquakes and cyclones. In thirty days it will go through the same rigors that the ordinary house suffers in the course of twenty years.

What interesting possibilities these new houses offer!

House-Moving Is Easy.

Suppose Jack Edwards of Chicago and Mrs. Edwards have just finished paying for their new house. At last, after long saving and struggle, their ambition to "own their own home" has become a glorious and happy reality. Then, suddenly, Jack's firm decides to transfer him to New Orleans. Must they give up the lovely dwelling they have worked so hard to own?

No, indeed, Jack simply calls the movers. They take screw-drivers and unbutton the little house, lift it aboard their truck and soon it is rolling gaily along to Dixie. Only a new cement foundation need be built. That is a simple matter that should take no more than a couple of weeks.

Should the new climate suggest a different way of laying out the rooms, why that is a simple matter, too. They can be buttoned together again in whatever arrangement its owners desire. And if the young couple would like to have a guest room to make it more convenient for his or her folks to visit them in New Orleans next winter, a couple of new panels can be buttoned on and made into a new room. When the Edwardses feel affluent enough to own something more on the scale of a southern mansion, they can add a whole new story just as easily.

Fresh air finds and those of us who like to feed poetic souls by flinging windows open to the balmy breezes of spring are likely to be a little chagrined with the new type of house. Here the spring breeze is not a pleasant zephyr, but an annoying draft. For this is an air-conditioned house, remember. The motor unit draws in the outside air with a central fan, washes it, purifies it and heats it or cools it. For that reason complete insulation from the outside temperatures is essential. The air supplied by the motor unit is in reality fresher and better to breathe than the outside air, no matter what the weather.

Roofs of the new houses can be flat for sun deck and play areas because these buildings, even though

The above rather elaborate conception of a colony of the new pre-fabricated motorized houses, drawn by Hugh Ferriss, has been offered Purdue university for study in its new housing course. Inset: Part of the colony of motorized homes which is being visited by 1,000 persons an hour at Cambridge, Mass.

they be only one story high, are built like skyscrapers. So complete will be the insulation from heat and cold, you can invite friends over whenever you want to for a wicker roast—with the bonfire built on the roof! The houses will also be lightning-proof, cyclone-proof and even earthquake-proof.

Modernists Make Concession.

The pre-fabricated walls are proof against sound and termites. They are made of steel, with panels of pressed asbestos and cement. They are practically indestructible. They feel like stucco and yet nails can be driven into them.

Only the front door will be made of wood—a true concession on the part of the designers—to allow for some little shred of the home-maker's sentiment to remain. Mr. Gunnison explains it:

"We don't want to be too modernistic. The housewife wants the 'feel' of wood on the door as she enters. It's more domestic—not so mechanical, somehow. Everything in the house has been done from her point of view."

It is easy to suppose that the housewife will really be more interested in the "feel" of machinery at her fingertips, ready to do most of her work for her. From that standard, certainly the house has been designed with her in mind. Despite the fact that it may be located in the remotest suburb or on a farm, the house is more like an efficient metropolitan apartment, set off by itself and a roof placed over it.

furnace (which is much smaller than furnaces we are accustomed to today), all of them automatic, of course.

Next to the kitchen is the bathroom and, this, too, has one wall facing the motor unit. From this wall come the bathtub with shower attachment, an electric heater for the extra warmth that is sometimes desirable in the bath on chilly mornings, and a lavatory big enough to bathe the baby in. The toilet also projects from this wall; it does not touch the floor, leaving plenty of room for brush and mop.

Perhaps the most wonderful thing about such a house is its cost. The five-room bungalow type can be built, with all mechanical equipment, for only $3,800; the scale is graduated to two-story affairs which cost less than $10,000.

The advent of pre-fabricated, motorized houses at low cost may, or may not, have an immediate noticeable effect upon the building industry. Mr. Gunnison thinks it will.

"They will open up an immediate market for hundreds of thousands of homes, create a demand for much labor in the building trades, stimulate the buying and production of materials and make modern, economical and proper housing available to hundreds of thousands of families now anxious to own their own homes, but financially unable to do so because of prices far beyond the reach of their reduced incomes," he said.

Likened to Automobile.

"The application of modern industrial methods to the framework of our antiquated building practices, their inherent economies, mass production and buying of materials and equipment have been correlated in production of the motorized home so that it has been brought to the same high plane of scientific design, engineering perfection, mechanical efficiency and economical production that removed the automobile from the 'millionaire's plaything' class of less than twenty years ago to make it standard and very necessary equipment of almost every American family."

It must be remembered that Mr. Gunnison's Houses, Inc., is not engaged in the manufacture or sale of houses of this type, but is merely conducting research, in an effort to show how better low-cost houses can be built. The motive is not altogether altruistic, of course, for Houses, Inc. is subsidized by General Electric and is assisted by American Radiator and Sanitary, both of whom will have plenty to sell when the pre-fabricated, motorized house becomes the general thing. But the work, in merit and interest to you and me, is worthy of publicity, in the opinion of this writer.

Meanwhile, building is on the upturn. Picking key cities, it is up 100 per cent for August of this year over last in Boston; 24 per cent in New York; 14 per cent in Philadelphia; 234 per cent in Pittsburgh; 900 per cent in Atlanta; 110 per cent in Chicago; 315 per cent in Kansas City, Mo.; 210 per cent in Memphis; 255 per cent in Fort Worth; 83 per cent in Denver; 180 per cent in Los Angeles, and 135 per cent in San Francisco.

On the recent Better Housing day celebrated throughout the nation, 3,500 new and better homes were started on a single morning.

Today the news that a new gold field had been discovered in Alaska or Nevada would send thousands of men who never had dug for gold, and who hadn't the least notion of how it looked in the raw state, to the site of the new find.

Even if there really was gold in the locality, not one man in a hundred who joined the rush would come back with any of it in his pockets.

Instead, he would have to depend on his family or friends to get back home, or remain a poor camp follower till he broke down and died.

Your private gold mine is your job.

If it isn't the kind of a job that offers any promise, find another one.

If you cannot find a regular job—and there are many people who can't just now—work at anything till something that you really know how to do crops up.

If you don't know how to do anything, learn how to do something. The man who has no trade or vocation, and not very much brain, is just simply out of luck.

Learn your job at the start and keep on learning more about it. You will have backsets and disappointment. But billions of people before and after Columbus, failed to find the gold that he sailed to gain.

As soon as you can get a job study it.

Talk to other men in the same business. Most of them, if they are even moderately successful, like to tell how they did it.

Question them, get them to teach you. Don't stop thinking as soon as you have made a start.

Keep in mind a fixed purpose to succeed—supposing you don't right away.

Supposing you don't get anything more than your board and bed for three or four years.

It stands to reason that you will do better if you keep up your courage than you will if you get the idea into your head that nothing you do can be of any help or use.

Your chance will come. But it won't do you any good unless you are ready for it.

Don't depend on others. They have their own problems, and they couldn't help you if they hadn't.

Depend on yourself, and keep yourself dependable.

Grit your teeth and go in to win.

People used to laugh at Trowbridge's poem in which he described the futile efforts of one Darius Green to fly through the air like a bird. They still laugh when

Spratt Flying His New Light Plane

George A. Spratt of Contesville, Pa., has invented a new airplane which weighs 200 pounds. The machine is capable of carrying a load equal to its weight and has a two gallon gas tank on which it can fly for an hour.

a man arises among them and declares he will soon be able to control the weather.

Not long ago I had dinner in a hotel. The temperature outside was more than 80 degrees Fahrenheit. The temperature in the room where I had my meal was 68. A few years ago anybody who declared that he could control the weather would be looked on as a trifle out of his mind. Today the weather is controlled in public buildings, in railroad trains, and in many other places where outside temperatures can be improved.

We are living in a time of miracles. They have become so common that they are no longer astonishing.

Yet in the same cities where weather conditioning has become a common thing, there is still greed, unwarranted ambition, and hundreds of the ills that have plagued humanity since the day of Adam.

We are making rapid physical progress.

But greed exists side by side with philanthropy—there are still international hatreds which contain the seeds of war, still slovenly methods of government, and still gangs of criminals who loot and plunder and commit wanton murders.

Here are a few miracles which people who are engaged in the miracle business would do well to consider. Why cannot some of the minds which have made it possible to "put a girdle round about the earth in forty minutes" find a way to do away with poverty and war, the two great forces which still remain the worst enemies of the race? War can never do it. The war that was heralded as a war to end war has engendered many other wars, and no man or collection of men seems to know how to stop them. We need more real miracle men.

The job to be done today is a united effort to put an end to the evils of civilization instead of bragging about what they have done for a humanity which is still wading knee deep in trouble, and is unable to find the way out.

There is crookedness and corruption in all the great cities and many of the small ones. Big rascals still control power that must be taken away from them, and given to patriotic, intelligent, far-seeing men, who want nothing for themselves.

LIFE'S PUZZLES

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

Life is full of puzzles. Experiences occur which defy all rational explanations.

Those who always have been unfortunate are convinced that "luck" controls destiny. Among these life puzzles is the seeming success of the wicked. Dishonest persons are successful while the honest are victims of misfortune and failure. Power, both economic and social, is in the hands of the unscrupulous. Virtue walks in rags and vice in silks. The brilliant lawyer gets his glibly client off unpunished. A premium is placed on ignorance while culture and education toll at a discount. To one person ease and luxury comes with little or no effort, to another the morrow brings no happy prospects of progress. We frequently hear the remark, "that man was born under a lucky star," while of another, it is said, "he is a child of cruel fate!"

It should be remembered, however, that these experiences are only "puzzles," which we can neither understand nor explain. Nature is a stern mother, and her laws are inviolable. She does not balance her accounts every day. Sometimes she waits a long time before calling for the final day of reckoning.

Regardless of values the same law holds true, disobedience is slavery. No man ever escaped injury to himself in consequence of the wrong he did another. In our own experience we recall men who seemed to rise by depressing others, but later in life they themselves were the bankrupts. A crook invariably dies in poverty. A gambler ultimately loses all his ill-gotten gains. In the final crisis dishonesty leads to ruin. The pyramid of stolen wealth falls like the old tower of Babel.

The irrevocable decree of the moral and social order seems to be, what you give you receive. "Give to the world the best you have and the best will come back to you." That nation which seeks to expand by the sword ultimately perishes by the same weapon. This most subtle of life's puzzles, "the seeming success of crime," is a very old problem. Job wrestled with it. Let us again remember that it is only a "seeming" success. The law of justice had not yet been vindicated. Life's inequalities express only the puzzles, not realities. Real life comes to those who are not depressed by these apparent inequalities but who live and work:

Each for the joy of the working,
And each to his separate star,
Shall draw the Thing as he sees it
For the God of Things as they are.

Mason and Dixon's Line
Mason and Dixon's line was a boundary between Pennsylvania and Maryland, surveyed by Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, English surveyors, from 1763 to 1767. Their purpose was to settle an old dispute between the Penn and Baltimore families, owners of large tracts in Pennsylvania and Maryland. When the Civil War came, the line was used roughly to mark the boundary between the free and slave states, but the slavery line, after leaving Maryland, Pennsylvania and what is now West Virginia, followed the Ohio river to the Mississippi and then—excepting the slave state of Missouri—the parallel of 36 degrees and 30 minutes, established by the Missouri compromise. After the war the expression, Mason and Dixon's line, came into general use to separate the North from the South.—Indianapolis News.

The Heel Fly
Heel fly is a local name in the South and West for the ox botfly, derived from the fact that the adults hover around the heels of cattle for the purpose of laying their eggs on the hairs.

TAP GAP

BENNIE set his lips in a very firm line and resolutely kept his eyes upon the ledger. Through the open window, came the syncopated tinkle of a piano and the rhythmic click of dancing shoes. Merely by raising his head Bennie could have looked across the narrow court directly into the room whence came those sounds. He could have seen the keyboard, with Morrie Neal's nimble fingers skipping over it, and beyond, a flash of bare legs as Beth tapped upon the platform.

Now it must not be assumed that this self-denial was a matter of conscientious regard for duty with him. To be frank, Bennie rather heartily despised his job and on most occasions was quite ready to neglect it for diversion. Ordinarily, too, nothing could have been so pleasantly diverting as to watch Beth dance, even from this distance and with the foreshortened view. But today there existed most unusual, not to say unhappy, circumstances: Beth and Bennie were "on the outs."

It had all happened out of a clear sky. For almost a year they had gone together with never a quarrel. And in the past few months plans for marriage had become a frequent topic between them. As soon as Bennie completed his study of wireless, there would be a government position waiting. Perhaps he would be sent to some romantic spot and Beth would go with him as his wife.

Bennie found a sort of bitter satisfaction in dwelling on his finality. They were, he told himself with savage conviction, as far apart as if they had never met. Beth could go her own sweet way, and if it led her right into the arms of that rat, Morrie Neal—why, all right. He, Bennie, didn't care a snap. She had had her chance last night to choose, and she had said: "Bennie Jackson, you're the meanest, most suspicious fellow I ever knew! Of course, I'm going to keep on taking the lessons Mr. Neal's giving me. What's wrong with that?"

So Bennie had picked up his cap and stalked out of her apartment, very coldly. He wasn't the kind to let a girl see that she had hurt him. Maybe Beth had forgotten about the treasurer's office, right next door to the dance director's, and that Bennie went there several times each day to return accounts to the safe.

Well, if that was what she wanted, she certainly could have it without any more interference from him. He was going to finish his wireless studies in a hurry and then get as far away as possible from Zenith studio and Hollywood and Beth Millard. He reached in the desk drawer for the little manual he always kept there, determined to spend a few minutes reviewing code.

As he took it out, his eyes strayed in one fleeting glance to the window opposite. Immediately they riveted there; he sat upright, tense and startled. The shade was being pulled down over the lower half of the window. He just had time for a glimpse of a man's hand on the cord; then it was completely drawn and Bennie was staring at a blank buff square.

The music and the clacking tap of feet had ceased. Involuntarily, Bennie's teeth came hard together.

At that moment the sound of the piano was resumed. Bennie halted in his tracks, puzzled. Yes, there could be no doubt about it; now he even heard Beth's shoes again. He faced around, irresolute and wondering.

Suddenly he stiffened, listening with renewed intensity. . . . The next instant he had sprung to the phone and was frantically pounding the switch.

"Give me the studio police—quick!"

Two minutes later four men with drawn revolvers preceded Bennie on the rush to Morrie Neal's office. Neal sat at the piano, his face taut and strained; Beth was still tapping feverishly.

The door at the far side stood open. The studio policemen rushed across through it. There came a yell, a string of oaths, a sound of heavy scuffling—and the thing was all over. The four uniformed men emerged, securely grasping two others whose looks revealed their profession.

Beth ran into Bennie's arms and clung there, crying: "Oh, darling, you're wonderful! I was so afraid!"

The treasurer of Zenith studio came out of his office, mopping his brow with a silk handkerchief, and gripped Bennie's hand warmly.

"You're a real hero, my boy!" he exclaimed; "but I don't understand—I don't see how you knew! Why, those thugs made Morrie and Miss Millard here go on with their practicing and told the rest of us they'd shoot the first one who let out a peep!"

Bennie grinned down into Beth's upturned adoring face.

"Here's where the credit goes," he replied; "if she hadn't remembered how to tap out a message in Morse code, I'd have been half a mile from here by now, thinking she didn't love me!"

So she was silent; and later, when they came back through the wet woods together, she decided that this was a matter none should ever know. And thus resolving, she found strength for the task before her, and was at peace again. Huldy was dead. Let it be by accident. The world would presently forget that Huldy had ever lived. When with Will she came back to the little house in the Valley, she had somehow stilled her fears.

Till she saw the sheriff there. When they came in, she felt her strength drain away. But then, and by Will himself, her foreboding was turned into fearful certainty; for Will said to this man:

"Why, Sheriff, what fetched you here?"

The sheriff hesitated. "I kind of hoped you'd bring this Zeke Dace back with you," he said, evasively.

Will shook his head. "I dunno where Zeke's got to," he admitted in troubled tones. "He wasn't to home." And he persisted: "But Sheriff, what fetched you?"

Jenny was breathless, waiting for the answer. Then Saladine said gravely: "I sent for him, Will."

Will stared at Saladine. "What for?" he protested, bewildered.

And then the sheriff said: "Why Will, the thing is, it looks to everybody as if maybe Miss Ferrin didn't just fall off of that ledge. They think some one maybe threw her off."

Jenny's throat constricted strangely. The hounds were on the trail.

As though from far away she heard Will stammer: "Killed her, you mean?"

"Something like that," Will stood with his head bowed. "I guess not," he said firmly at last. "Who'd do that?"

"I was thinking maybe this Zeke Dace," Sohier suggested.

But Will shook his head. "No Sheriff, he insisted. 'Whatever did happen, it wasn't Zeke. He wouldn't go to hurt her.' And he continued, half to himself: 'There might have been some to hurt Huldy; but not Zeke! Why, I'd as soon think I did it myself,' he said."

Jenny felt the shock of a great blow.

Then Bart chuckled. "That's a joke, Will. I mean, to think you'd hurt Huldy," he explained, and he added hotly: "Not that anybody'd blame you! She needed it." He spoke to the sheriff. "Anyone around here will say the same!"

Will moved a little toward him. "I don't take that kindly, Bart," he said. "I don't want that kind of talk from you or anybody. Not about Huldy. Not now."

There was, briefly, silence; but after a moment the sheriff said, half to himself, in almost querulous tones:

"It's a pity she didn't come to long enough to tell what happened to her!"

After the sheriff spoke, there was silence for a moment; then Jenny had a respite, for Joe Matthews, the undertaker, came out of the dining room. He spoke to Will.

"There, Will," he said. "I've done all that needs doing tonight; and if you want, I'll carry her home." He hesitated, added: "But if you take my advice, let her lay here tonight. I can tend to everything a sight better in the morning."

Marm Pierce said: "She's well come to stay, Will!"

Will nodded. "Well, likely that's sensible," he agreed.

Jenny, while their attention was thus turned away from her, opened the door and stepped out on the porch, grateful for the taste of cool, moist air. In the kitchen she heard the sheriff say doubtfully: "I guess, Joe, you'll want to go along home now. I don't know as I ought to leave yet, though. I'd like to see this Zeke Dace, first. But I wish't you'd bring Doc Harris in the morning. I want him to look her over."

When presently the undertaker came out to depart, Jenny drew aside out of his way. Sohier and Saladine crossed with him to where his truck stood, spoke with him there. Then Bart came out, and said to Jenny casually:

"Hot in there, ain't it?" And in a lower tone: "Don't you worry, Jen! Nothing to be afraid of."

He too had seen her terror then! It must have been plain, for them all to see. But even as she thought this, she realized suddenly that she was no longer afraid, and wondered why. And then, without speaking to Bart, she came quickly back into the kitchen where were Marm Pierce and Will. Her hand touched Will's sleeve, and peace filled her; and a deep enlightenment and certainty, like a revelation.

Then the truck departed, and Bart and Sohier and Saladine returned indoors. After a moment the sheriff appealed to Saladine. "Jim," he said. "Looks like you could figure something out of this business. I guess you was the last one to see Miss Ferrin alive."

Saladine shook his head. "I don't see into it at all," he confessed.

Bart turned to Will. "How about you, Will?" he urged. "Didn't you hear her screech when she fell? I'd have said everybody in a mile could have heard that. It sounded mighty loud to me."

Will shook his head. "The noise wouldn't carry up to the farm, with the hill between, and the trees."

He looked at Saladine. "I mind," he said, "when you went off with Huldy, Zeke he come out of the shed like he'd go along after you. I stopped him, made him stay behind." And he continued after a moment: "Seems like I kep' him there a sight longer'n I'd take you to get down to the brook. Supposing you didn't stop any time on the ledge?"

"I didn't," Saladine said.

There was silence for a moment; then Will spoke again, gropingly.

"By the time I figured you'd be gone," he explained, "I left Zeke and went into the house; but when it come on to rain, I wondered where Huldy was. I come out on the porch and yelled for Zeke, but he didn't answer, so I went hunting him. I started to go down the path to the brook. But then decided there wasn't any use in that." He added with a glance at Saladine: "I see tracks where you'd gone down, where your boots had slipped."

Saladine spoke quickly. "Boots? I've got shoes on. It was some one else," he insisted. "It wasn't me."

Will said stubbornly: "It was boot tracks that I see. Somebody with boots on had gone down the trail."

And Bart spoke. "Guess Zeke had boots on, didn't he?"

Will considered, and he nodded. "Likely," he agreed. "Yes, he did I mind, now. He did."

The sheriff stirred. "The way it looks to me," he decided, "Zeke's the one to find; and we ain't likely to find him, long as we're settling here!"

"Not you can't find him outside, Marm Pierce cried sharply. "Show some sense, Sheriff! You couldn't see Zeke ten feet away, a night like this, if he was a mind to hide. Set down. Use your head, 'stead of your feet! Use your eyes!"

"What good's my eyes going to do me here?" he urged.

"There's been enough to see, if you wasn't blind," she told him; and she looked briefly at Jenny. "Jenny," she called sharply. "You were almighty scared a while ago. I think you know something more'n you've told. You was down brook this morning. Did you see anything, hear anything at all?" Her tones were insistent.

Marm Pierce came closer to the girl. "Jenny, I can see more than most; but I can't see everything. What was it scared you, a while ago, when the sheriff said that about wishing Huldy had come to, before she died? What was it, Jenny?" she demanded.

Jenny looked at Will's bowed head, and her smile suddenly was radiant as the sun. "It don't mean a thing to me now," she protested softly. "Because I can see it wasn't true."

"What was it, Jenny?" the old woman insisted.

"Huldy did come to, for a minute, before she died," said Jenny then.

Marm Pierce cried in a deep incredulity:

"Jenny, she never did!"

And Bart exclaimed: "She couldn't, Jenny! Why, she was as good as dead before I ever got her here!"

Jenny repeated slowly: "She did, anyway." And for a moment she said no more. She stood near the cabinet over the sink, where knives and forks and cooking dishes were stowed away. Bart was by the door into the shed. Marm Pierce was between Jenny and the stove; and Sheriff Sohier sat in front of the oven with his greatcoat loose about him.

Will was beyond the stove, near the other door, impassive, waiting. "She told me you did it, Will," said Jenny, with a smile on her lips, and her glance serene.

Bart uttered a low ejaculation; but Marm Pierce spoke in brisk insistence.

"How come you didn't call me?" "I didn't want you," Jenny told her gently.

"The more fool you!" said Marm Pierce briskly, her patience near the breaking point. "What happened?" she demanded.

The sheriff spoke heavily. "Miss Pierce, you let her tell it her own way," he urged. So Marm Pierce was silenced; and Jenny's eyes turned again to Will. The big man shook and swayed where he stood, as though this that Jenny had to say had struck him nerveless.

Then Jenny faced the sheriff steadily and she said: "Miss Ferrin looked at me, and her mouth twisted into a kind of laugh, and she said something. First off, I couldn't hear her. She was awful weak, and I leaned down and I said to her, 'It's all right, Miss Ferrin!' And she laughed at me I mean her mouth twisted as if she was trying to! And this time I heard what she said."

Marm Pierce exploded in a fierce impatience: "Get on with it, Jenny! What did she say?"

And Jenny answered: "She said I could have him now!"

"I guess I kind of moved back at that, away from her! It was like she'd slapped me!" Her cheek was pale, and she spoke almost numbly. "I didn't know what to do," she confessed. "So I just tried to tell her it was all right, and I told her Will was coming."

Her tones shook, then steeled.

"And then she said 'It,' she concluded. "She said, kind of slow and weak: 'Will knocked me off—' And she had to wait a minute, and then she said: 'He hit me!'"

The girl was silent for an instant before she could go on.

"Her mouth was still kind of laughing," she finished. "And she sort of coughed. I guess that was when she died." A deep tremor shook her, but her voice was firm. "She laid there, looking at me, and her mouth grinning at me; but I guess she was dead by then. Anyway, she didn't say any more."

She finished and was still, waiting. And suddenly she was very tired, dreading what was to come. Yet for a while no one spoke at all.

CHAPTER X

JENNY's disclosure for a moment hushed them all. Marm Pierce was the first to speak.

"Whew!" she exclaimed. "I declare, it's hot as love in hay time, here!"

Bart opened the door into the shed, to admit some air.

The sheriff crossed his feet and sat in a deep embarrassment. His shoes scraped on the floor; and Marm Pierce said:

"I smell a lamp smoking."

The lamps here were all in order; but when she opened the door into the dining-room where Huldy lay, a reek of soot and smoke emerged. The old woman bustled in there, complaining, scolding the absent Joe Matthews.

"Takes a man to make a mess of things," she protested. She brought out the lamp, its chimney black. "He left it turned up too high," she declared; and replaced it with another lamp, and they heard her raise the windows a little from the bottom. "I'll air out a mite," she explained, talking to herself in the other room.

Then she returned, shut the dining room door again.

"Well!" she ejaculated. "I declare, I've had about enough of the goings on this day. Jenny, why didn't you tell me this here before?"

Jenny looked at Will, and she said: "Because first off I was afraid it was true." She smiled steadily. "Only I knowed that even if it was, I didn't care!"

"How do you mean, you didn't care?" the sheriff asked, in a dull perplexity.

But before Jenny replied, Marm Pierce spoke, in a sort of defiance. "I'll tell you that, Sheriff," she said. "The thing is, Will and Jenny had got to like each other mighty well, before Huldy come back after that time she went away. Will he's fine; and so's Jenny. No harm in it. I hoped Huldy'd not come back ever. It looked to me that Will'd be better off if he was rid of her for good and all. But when she did come, Jenny, she didn't see him after that, till today."

She concluded: "But Jenny and Will would have married before this, if Huldy hadn't been married to Will. Jenny loves him and he loves her, and I'm glad of it, if it comes to that. Jenny's fine, and Will's a man!"

"And nobody'd blame him for hitting Huldy," Bart insisted, quick to Will's defense. "She needed it, bad! But he never meant to knock her off the ledge!"

Jenny cried, swift, indignant: "Will never touched her, Bart!"

The sheriff looked up at her. "How come you to be so sure, Jenny?" he asked in sober tones.

"If I wasn't sure," Jenny challenged, "d'you think I'd ever have told you, or anybody, what she said?"

"You wouldn't want to marry a man that'd kill his wife, would you?" Sohier urged; and Jenny's eyes met his fairly, and hers were misty with deep tenderness.

"He didn't," she insisted steadily. "But I'd want to marry Will any way if come, and no matter what he done!"

"Well, that ain't telling me how you know he didn't do it?" the sheriff repeated doggedly. "What made you sure, all of a sudden, now?"

"Just—coming to my senses," Jenny decided. "I was kind of numb for a while; but then after I'd been with Will for a spell, I was sure!"

The sheriff, surprisingly, chuckled. "I'd admire to hear you testify like that in court," he declared. "I'd like to see what the judge would say." He became grave again, and looked at last at Will. "How about it, Will?" he suggested soberly.

"Anything you've got to say?"

Will, with all their eyes upon him, stood fumbling for words. "If it was anyone but Jenny told me, I wouldn't believe Huldy said it," he declared.

"Tain't true, I guess you'll say."

"No. No. It ain't true."

The sheriff frowned. "How come Miss Ferrin to say a thing like that, then?" he protested. "Don't seem as if a woman would tell a straight-out lie, the minute before she died!"

"She was out of her head, I reckon," Will offered.

Marm Pierce had been silent long; but now she spoke, in sharp angry tones.

"Will Ferrin, you're a fool!" she exclaimed. "I guess most men are, where a woman's concerned; but you're a bigger fool than most. You know as well as anyone that Huldy was no good!"

His head lifted as though he would speak, but her voice rose. "Now don't try to shut me up, Will Ferrin!" she cried. "For I'm going to have my say! Land knows why Huldy married you; but everybody knows she was a bad wife to you. She was bad from her toes up. Dead as she is, I'll say so, if it's the last word I do say. She'd have drove any man that wasn't a saint or a fool to kill her long ago; but you didn't kill her. You always would speak soft to Huldy, and stand anything from her, and come down hard on anyone that tried to tell you the truth about her!"

She turned as though on a sudden thought to the sheriff. "Will didn't hit her," she insisted. "He wouldn't have the spunk to! He always did treat Huldy like a lady, no matter how she behaved. Maybe if he'd took a hoop-pole to her long ago . . ."

But she checked the word, swung to Will again.

"Will, you listen to me," she commanded him. "Huldy knowed what she was saying, all right; and she knowed she was dying, too. But if she could make Jenny believe you killed her, there couldn't ever be any happiness between the two of you; and that's what Huldy wanted. That's why she said what she did. So's to make it hard for you, and bitter hard for my Jenny!"

And she said with a sudden passion in her tones: "Just for that, I'd put her out of my house this minute, dead though she be, if it wasn't for you, Will. As it is, she can stay; but you better get some sense into your head! She was a man-chasing, lying, trouble-making woman, and that's the truth of it, and I'm glad she's dead, if you ask me!"

She finished and stood panting with her own pent rage, and looked at Will as though in challenge; as though she dared him to deny her words. And Jenny crossed to Will's side, not touching him, but ready there, and loyal.

Then Will spoke slowly. "Ma'am," he told old Marm Pierce, "I guess if it come to that, I knowed Huldy better than most. But I don't want folks to talk about her so! There was pleading in his tones."

"Then don't you play the dumb fool to me," said Old Marm Pierce angrily. "Denying what's as plain as day! She always would make trouble when she could. She set Zeke on Bart two years ago; and she'd set Jenny against you now, if she could . . ."

The Ananda, a Temple of Pagan.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

PAGAN, Burma's Sacred City, is a solemnity and mystery; about it is enchantment. Here, 90 miles southwest of Mandalay, the traveler finds himself in the midst of a veritable forest of temples and pagodas, large and small, nearly perfect or almost unrecognizable because of decay. Before their vast bulks the traveler becomes painfully conscious of his littleness and insignificance. His mere presence seems an impertinence. The crumbling walls, the fallen pinnacles and the desolation are eloquent of the vanity of fame, the hollowness of glory, and the futility of human effort.

Of the 5,000 or more temples that are still to be seen, the Ananda, the Thathlynyu, and Gawdawpalin, standing all three within a circle of a quarter of a mile radius, are surpassingly beautiful and majestic.

The Ananda rises like a structure of foam. On its summit, like the flame upon some altar, a slender, golden spire gathers the radiance of the sun and flings it forth again to every quarter. It is the first of all the temples to command the traveler's attention; it is the last upon which he gazes as the swift steamer bears him away. The Thathlynyu has suffered more from time and neglect than has the Ananda. Its walls are blackened and much of the detail of its ornamentation has fallen away. It is hardly beautiful; it is majestic. About it is a suggestion of enormous solidity and a noble loftiness of conception.

The third temple has neither the exquisite beauty of the Ananda nor the sublimity of the Thathlynyu; yet in the perfect harmony of its proportions, the refinement of every detail, it has a charm of its own. It contributes with the others to the spell which Pagan casts over even the most careless visitor.

Level View From Circuit House.

Past the Gawdawpalin the path leads on to the circuit house. At every step is revealed some new grouping of effects, some new harmonies of proportion or felicitous detail, and from the spacious veranda of the resthouse the view is one never to be forgotten. Westward the river and the hills, silver and gold and blue in the sunset; near at hand the Gawdawpalin, with orange light and soft purple shadows mingling and shifting over its huge battlements; farther away the Ananda and the Thathlynyu, now indistinct in the twilight; and all around, the half-seen outlines of pagodas.

Heroic achievements, the basest villainy, successful subtlety—all these are mingled in the history of this ruined city.

The greatness of Pagan, and with it reliable Burmese history, dates from the accession of Anawrata, about A. D. 1017. This truly remarkable monarch won by the sword a splendid empire and established a dynasty that continued in power for more than 200 years.

At the beginning of his reign he devoted himself to the moral and religious uplift of his people. A corrupt and degrading "Naga worship," or obedience to devils, in the form of serpents, had come through Assam from northern India.

Anawrata's Great Reform.

Soon after Anawrata ascended the throne Buddhist missionaries arrived at Pagan from the country of the Talings, a people dwelling to the south and, as a result of the frequent and easy communication with India by sea, highly civilized. These Taling missionaries found the king a zealous convert. He expelled the priests of the abominable cult that for so many years had debauched his people, strictly proscribed the Naga worship, and did everything in his power to further the efforts of the preachers.

His fervor had, however, one lamentable result. Hearing that there were in Thaton, the Taling capital, copies of the Buddhist Sacred Books and several precious relics, he sent a noble envoy to beg for such portions as might be spared. His reasonable request was refused in a singularly insolent manner. With characteristic energy Anawrata assembled an army and a fleet and moved against Thaton. He was completely successful, and as the spoils of victory he carried back to Pagan not only the books and the priceless relics but the king and queen of the fallen city, together with principal nobles, rich treasure, 32 white elephants, and a host of 30,000 artificers and scholars.

This signal success only fanned the flame of Anawrata's zeal. A fresh field for enterprise was found in Ceylon. There was in that island a most sacred relic, nothing less than a tooth of Gautama. Such a trophy was beyond price and its possession by Pagan would sanctify and ennoble the king's name. Accordingly, with four trusty captains, mounted on matchless steeds, Anawrata hastened to the seashore and embarked for Ceylon at nightfall.

But unseen hands were fighting on the side of the sovereign of Ceylon and sacred tooth. The ship sped swiftly on through the night. Yet when the travelers awoke it was to find themselves anchored a little below Pagan.

Barred but not defeated, Anawrata sent an envoy to Sangabodhi, the king, an envoy who bore many costly presents and who was instructed to demand the tooth of Gautama in return.

Gautama Supplied Teeth.

Sangabodhi, unwilling to surrender his most precious possession, yet fearful of arousing the ire of so dreadful a monarch as the king of Pagan, was in sore straits. In his distress he expressed the wish that he might have two such teeth. No sooner had he given utterance to this desire than the tooth produced a fellow exactly resembling itself! In fact, the two were indistinguishable until the original declared itself by rising into the air and performing miracles.

The duplicate was placed in a casket of gold and delivered to the envoy who carried it back with great pomp to Pagan.

To solve the difficulty of choosing a site for the enshrinement of the prize, the casket was placed on the back of a white elephant, and it was announced that wherever the animal halted there should be the resting place of the tooth.

Much to the disappointment of all, the elephant bearing his precious burden crossed the river and knelt down near the Tangyi hills. This was very far from the palace, and the king expressed his regret that he also had not two sacred teeth. Here again the wish was father to the miracle. Immediately there were two teeth instead of one! The duplicate was placed on the elephant's back and the beast was hidden to move on.

Five times the elephant halted before reaching the neighborhood of the palace, and at each place the tooth was miraculously multiplied, until at last the site of the Lokananda was reached and the king professed himself satisfied. At each stop a shrine was built, and at the last was reared the pile which still remains as one of the monuments to Anawrata's greatness.

Anawrata's further exploits would make a long tale. In the records of his reign indisputable facts have been strangely intermingled with wild fancies and grotesque imaginings. He is said to have built 43 cities and to have dug canals and

Drug Makes Its Victim See Double

Puts End to Choking Sensation of Gas.

London.—A jab in the arm instead of the choking sensation of gas is a new method of "putting you to sleep" in the dentist's chair.

The new drug is called evipan-sodium, and it has been in use for some months, not only for dental work but for more serious operations.

You sit in the chair. The anesthetist puts a strap around your upper arm just as in taking a blood pressure.

A vein expands a little under the pressure. You feel a short jab of the needle.

In a second things become hazy. There is none of that swelling, burning, choking feeling that gas gives some people.

In fact, you do not suspect anything. You do not even dream as you do under gas.

Meanwhile your teeth are being extracted.

Then you come round—slightly intoxicated. You see things double. You are not safe on your feet.

And this is the disadvantage of evipan. Unlike gas, you cannot go back to work after it. You must rest; and sleep.

But the evipan method is excellent for people who have had gas once and fear it.

Almost everybody can have it, if the dentist is given warning that it is wanted. The exceptions are people who have liver trouble or whose veins are too thin to take an injection.

Evipan, however, is more expensive than gas. It is a German discovery.

Some dental experts are against using it, on the grounds that not sufficient is known about the drug.

But it is expected that when sufficient data are available its use in dental and other operations will be more common.

BEDTIME STORY

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

WIT AGAINST WIT

IT WAS a dreadful game the hunter with the terrible gun and Lightfoot the Deer were playing in the Green Forest. It was a matching of wit against wit, the hunter seeking to take Lightfoot's life and Lightfoot seeking to save it. The experience of other years had taught Lightfoot much of the ways of hunters and not one of the things he had learned about them was forgotten. But the hunter in his turn knew much of the ways of deer. So it was that each was trying his best to outguess the other.

When the hunter found the hiding place Lightfoot had left at the warning of Sammy Jay, he followed

There Was Only One Direction in Which It Was Safe for Lightfoot to Move.

Lightfoot's tracks for a short distance. It was slow work and only one whose eyes had been trained to notice little things could have done it. You see, there was no snow and it was only now and then when he had stepped on a bit of soft ground that Lightfoot had left a footprint. But there were other signs which the hunter knew how to read, a freshly upturned leaf here and there, a bit of moss lightly crushed. These things told the hunter which way Lightfoot had gone.

Slowly, patiently, watchfully, the hunter followed. After a while he stopped with a satisfied grin. "I thought as much," he muttered. "He heard that pesky Jay and circled around so as to get my scent. I'll just cut across to my old trail and unless I am greatly mistaken I'll find his tracks there."

So swiftly, but silently, the hunter cut across his old trail and in a few moments he found just what he expected, one of Lightfoot's footprints. Once more he grinned. "Well, old fellow, I've outguessed you this time," said he to himself. "I am behind you and the wind is from you to me so that you cannot get my scent. I wouldn't be a bit surprised if you're behind that old windfall." He at once began to move forward silently and cautiously with eyes and ears alert and his terrible gun ready for instant use.

Now when Lightfoot followed behind the hunter, had lost the scent of the latter, he guessed right away that the latter had found his tracks and had started to follow them. Lightfoot stood still and listened with all his might for some little sound to tell him where the hunter was. But there was no sound, and after a little Lightfoot began to move on. He didn't dare to remain still lest the hunter should creep up within shooting distance.

There was only one direction in which it was safe for Lightfoot to move, and that was the direction from which the Merry Little Breezes were blowing. As long as they brought him none of the dreaded man smell he knew that he was safe. The hunter might be behind him. Probably he was. But ahead of him, so long as the Merry Little Breezes were blowing in his face and brought no dreaded man smell, was safety.

reservoirs for the benefit of his people. Under his efficient and energetic administration the petty kingdom of Pagan became an empire stretching from the Malacca Islands and Siam to Bengal and the frontiers of China. Thus was inaugurated the most glorious period in Burmese history.

Anawrata's end was tragic. One day, as he was riding through the forest on an elephant, he struck his head against the branch of a tree in which dwelt two nats—Telnbin and his wife, Lelnbin. In a fit of rage the monarch dragged Lelnbin down from the tree and beat her mercilessly.

Telnbin, in his turn, enraged at the king's cruelty, lay in wait for Anawrata in the depths of the jungle. Taking the form of a huge white buffalo, he furiously charged the unhappy monarch and succeeded in impaling him upon one of his horns. The body was never found.

Conquered by the Chinese.

For more than two centuries the successors of Anawrata more or less worthily maintained the dignity and prestige of Pagan. But in the north was developing a power that was soon to engulf not Pagan only, but almost the entire continent of Asia. Kublai Khan in 1254 conquered what is now Yunnan, and the Chinese were thus brought into contact with Burma. To the resulting conflict there could be but one issue. In 1283 Pagan fell before invaders from the north, never again to attain historical significance. Of the great battle between the two armies on the plain of Voelam, Marco Polo gives a graphic and spirited account.

Though under the circumstances, the fall of Pagan was inevitable, the last king of that unfortunate capital stands in pitiful contrast to the great Anawrata. Known to history as Tayokpyemin, the King Who Ran Away From the Chinese, he was utterly unworthy of his noble office. In the Mingalazedi is an inscription which commemorates his achievements at the table. Here it is recorded that he never dined off fewer than three hundred dishes!

While the Chinese host was yet a long way from the city, the cowardly king fled down the river to Bassein. When the cooks who he had taken with him were able to produce only 150 dishes, the full horror of his position dawned upon the unhappy monarch. He burst into childish tears and exclaimed, "Now I am poor indeed!"

When the invaders had taken their toll of Pagan and retired, he thought of returning. At Prome, however, he was met by one of his sons, who offered him poisoned food. For a time the wretched hesitated. At last, convinced that it was better to die so than by the sword, he yielded and met a fate that, as few writers have avoided the temptation to remark, was singularly appropriate to his character.

Accent Is on Costume Suit for Fall

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SO MANY women do not think they can wear suits, because, unless one be slim and svelte, a blouse and skirt are apt to prove a problem at the waist-line. To such "cheerio" is the message for designers of vision and inventive genius have taken the matter to heart and have come to the rescue of despairing ones. They have surmounted the difficulty via that which they are pleased to title in fashion's vocabulary as the "costume suit." Need less to say the new costume suits carry the promise of a foremost vogue, autumn and winter through, seeing that they are proving as effective as a strict reducing diet in slenderizing the figure.

The idea is to top a slim frock or some one or other of the incomparably handsome wools or wools-and-silk, such as are glorifying the current fabric showings, with a varied length coat to match. The fact that intriguing fur trimmings are playing such an important role in present-day styling adds to the glamor and prestige of these roguish costumes.

In tuning the theme of these slenderizing suit effects to the individuality of the wearer, much depends upon the coat to "turn the trick." The accompanying illustration of a trio of molds recently shown by style creators of the Chicago wholesale market district demonstrates the point better than words can tell.

If your ambition is to arrive at slimness and height, the costume to the left in the picture will help you make dreams come true. The slightly full-below-the-elbow sleeves, with just the right length to the coat, combined with fitted bodice lines and slender hipline trend to accentuate a slenderized silhouette. The simple gored lines of the skirt also trend to the straight slim look.

The bright metal touch which is so dramatically enhancing the new fashions is present in the double collar and pointed vestee front. The collar is of black lynx as is the banding at the bottom of the coat.

For the tall stately woman or the slim older woman who aspires to added slimness, an answer to her longings is given in the smart restaurant costume as pictured in the center of the group. It reflects influence of the Italian renaissance especially in the grandiose royal purple velvet which fashions it. The rich and beautiful reds, purples and greens of early Italian painters are the featured kind this season. Fitted basque with snug little waist line, trimly fitting hips and flaring below-the-knees skirt are all flattering. The glaringly new details, however, are a youthful peplum flare of the jacket together with full sleeves that are fitted in at the wrist to be very flattering to the hands. The pillow muff which she carries is also significant, for it has been quite some time since this type of muff was in fashion. The fur is a shaded trimmer and its manner of bordering the edges emphasizes a high-style trimming note.

From Russia comes the suggestion for the fitted town suit shown to the right. It registers as very "young" for its flared tunic line and a Russe makes it youthful. It is flattering to either the tall or short slim figure, depending upon the length of the coat. Mahogany rust, a new rich one not too reddish is the color of the cloth. Tailored bandings of beige trimmer make this costume suit look all the more Russian. The frock underneath, however, is quite American with its simple tailored lines and amusing pockets and move. wooden buttons

Even human beings have devalued, according to a European scientist, who declares that at present prices chemicals in a man 5 feet 8 inches high are worth only $37.87, compared with $80 five years ago.

DISTRESS MONEY

During the war and after the collapse of the Austrian monarchy, when coins disappeared and were largely hoarded, many different kinds of paper notes, so-called "distress money," were issued by various towns, villages and provinces. In addition to primitive slips of paper, pieces of wood, parchment, leather, lacquer, and even porcelain were used as money. All these are on show at a remarkable exhibition at the Bagenbund gallery at Vienna. The exhibition shows that not only societies, but also innkeepers, newspapers, and political parties issued money tokens.

Beauty that "Stays On"

Try Simoniz and Simoniz Kleener on your car. They'll make it sparkle like new again... and stay beautiful! In fact, you can't expect your car to keep its beauty unless you Simoniz it. Only Simoniz protects the finish, makes it last longer, and keeps the colors from fading. So, the sooner you Simoniz your car the better.

WHEN THE DOCTOR SAYS YOU HAVE "TOO MUCH ACID"

Health, your doctor will tell you, is based on a delicate balance in the system between alkalinity and acidity. Modern day habits, especially the foods we eat, destroy this balance by creating excess acid. Watch for acid danger signals!

In the mouth acids attack enamel, bring tooth decay and bad breath. In the stomach they attack delicate linings and bring sick headaches, indigestion, gas and constipation, and often chronic disorders.

Neutralize excess acids at once with Milnesia Wafers—original Milk of Magnesia in tasty Wafer form. One Wafer before bedtime, and the whole digestive system, from mouth and gums to intestines, is kept sweet and clean and clear of these harmful acids. Thousands of physicians now recommend Milnesia.

Economical, too! Each Milnesia package contains more Magnesium Hydroxide than all other liquid forms.

STAR DUST

MOVIE AND RADIO

By VIRGINIA VALE

PROBABLY one of the most dramatic things that has ever happened in connection with the making of motion pictures was the confession in New York of those six young gangsters recently.

Accused of murdering a collector for the subway, they had been grilled all night without result. A motion picture executive was in the office of District Attorney Geoghan the next day on business. Geoghan happened to mention the case, and added "Want to meet one of them?"

The one they called Duke was brought in—sleek, composed, determinedly innocent. The movie man questioned him about himself and finally asked "How'd you like to pose for a news reel?"

Duke was delighted; he promptly took out a comb and fixed his hair. A news reel crew from the movie man's own organization was on hand, unknown to him; it had been sent down just on a hunch.

So—the six young bandits were called in, and the first thing anybody knew they were confessing the crime. The excitement of breaking into the movies was too much for them!

Pity Adrienne Ames, who thought she was seriously ill and found that her trouble was just hunger, caused by the need of dieting in order to go on making pictures! Seems funny that girls with plenty of money can't eat, when so many people can't do it because they can't buy food.

That need for dieting has a lot to do with the retirement of screen stars. When Phyllis Haver left the movies, just as her career was at its height, (she'd been asked to do "Anna Christie"—remember?—and didn't), and Garbo got the part she said to me "Just think! Now I can eat all the baked beans I want to!"

And she can—she married a man who's head of a big canned goods business.

One star's meat is another star's poison. Paramount bought the popular book, "National Velvet," so that Claudette Colbert could play the heroine, a part not very well suited to her, and she knew it. Katherine Hepburn is crazy to play it. So maybe Paramount will borrow her for it, or perhaps RKO will buy the story from them for her. You can be sure of one thing—Hepburn will play it. She gets what she wants.

Put the name of Jimmie Savo down in your notebooks; it looks as if he'd be one of our biggest stars before long.

Known as one of our greatest masters of pantomime, quite as great as Chaplin, he long ago made a name for himself on the stage. But the movies didn't seem to take to him. He made a picture for Flecht and MacArthur, "Once in a Blue Moon," which was so bad that he tried to buy it from them so that it wouldn't be released. He was fine but the picture was awful. Finally it was shown in a few places, advertised as "The Worst Picture in the World."

You can imagine how Savo liked that. But now Hal Roach has signed him up and promised that he can select his own stories. Maybe he'll get a break, and then he'll land on top. Maybe he won't, and you'll never see him on the screen after one picture. He deserves the best of luck.

He's a delightful person, very good looking, rather naive, which is odd in a man who has been on Broadway for years.

Ruth Chatterton's career may take another twist. She left the stage ten years ago, went into pictures two years later, and now may return to the stage again.

She owes her start in pictures to Lubitsch, who gave her a part when nobody else wanted her. She went straight to the top, as you know.

Now pictures don't seem to be quite the right field for her, and the theatrical managers are urging her to come back. Nice to have two strings to your bow, isn't it?

D. W. Griffith. saw her on the street in Westport, Conn., one day not long ago, and never did anyone look less like a movie star, or more beautiful. She's happily married and the movies nowadays just mean something to go to evenings.

James Melton, that sweet singer of the air waves, is in Hollywood to do a picture. And the first thing that happened to him after he arrived was an encounter with a hold-up man. He arrived at his destination—a party at Pat O'Brien's—thrilled to death over it.

ODDS AND ENDS... Jimmie Cagney is drinking tea afternoons—just happens to like it... Jean Harlow will be a brunette in "Riff Raff"... Ford Bond, Kelvin Keck and James Wallington are resigning as radio announcers. They're free lance artists now, thank you... Take all your handkerchiefs to "The Dark Angel"... Fredric March almost missed the boat when he sailed for Europe the other day... Can you imagine Kate Smith in roles of the Maria Dressler type? One of the movie magnates says, but as yet Kate hasn't promised to try them.

Planes Aid in War Upon Liquor Ships

Rum Runners Now Transfer Cargoes at Sea.

Washington.—Customs officials are mapping plans for a decisive campaign against the latest ruse of rum runners who have shifted their bases to the high seas.

Stripped of their former bases by co-operative moves of the United States, France, Newfoundland, British Honduras and Guatemala, smugglers are now chartering vessels to transport liquor cargoes from Europe for delivery to smaller ships at sea.

This was disclosed in reports from customs officials to executives of the Treasury department.

A large fleet of planes is operating from seven scattered coastal points, spotting doubtful vessels 50 miles out at sea. These planes are in constant touch with revenue cutters and land stations.

Tightened restrictions on Atlantic Islands which previously had based large numbers of rum running boats, have driven the smugglers to bold measures. Some in recent months have even run small liquor vessels into large American ports, on the chance they would slip by.

One by one the choicest operating bases of the rum runners have vanished. Mariel, Cuba; Belize in British Honduras; Puerto Barrios in Guatemala, St. John's Island in Newfoundland and the French colony, St. Pierre et Miquelon, each has been closed under agreement with their governments.

Within the next two months, it was indicated, the drive against the chartered ships is expected to be felt. Though the campaign may later be extended to Pacific ports, rum smuggling on that coast does not appear so heavy.

Farmer Rents Turkeys to Eat Grasshoppers

Gypsum, Kan.—Victor Van Meter of this town has one of the most unusual money-making schemes ever tried in this vicinity.

He owns 700 turkey gobblers which he rents out at $2.50 per day to farmers whose farms are infested with grasshoppers and locusts. The gobblers gobble the insects and Van Meter moves on to another farm. He provides portable roosts in the fields for the young turkeys. Van Meter pitches a tent near by, personally supervises the work and sees to it that no harm comes to his turkeys.

Sometimes it requires three or four days to rid one farm completely of the insects but the farmers say it is well worth the price. When the gobblers are thoroughly fattened Van Meter will sell them and raise another flock.

Nova Scotia Discovered 3 Times

Nova Scotia, the Atlantic province of Canada, claims three discoverers. John Cabot landed on Cape Breton Island in 1497, declared he was the discoverer and claimed it for Henry VII of England. John Denys, a Frenchman, touched on it in 1500 and thought that he had discovered it. In 1521 Jean Verazano, a Florentine under the commission of Francis I of France, came across it and claimed the entire American coastline from Nova Scotia to the Carolinas, and "all the regions beyond." Although there is no proof, there is everything of a convincing nature to make fairly definite that Leif Ericson, the adventurous Viking, discovered Nova Scotia away back in 1000.

Execution Chamber Uses Two Methods

North Carolina Will Use Gas and Electricity.

Raleigh, N. C.—Newer than the gas-electric railway car is the gas-electric death chamber soon to be completed in North Carolina's central prison here.

The combination death house was designed by engineers of the state highway and public works commission.

The new chamber is being installed within the present octagonal death chamber at the prison.

There will be a panel about three feet high and nine feet long, in front of double, shatter-proof plate glass, through which witnesses may watch the execution. The interior will be of bolted and welded steel plates.

The exterior will be covered with terra-cotta tile except for the glass observation windows.

A special walkway will connect the chamber with "death row." Two heavy doors, like refrigerator doors in this walkway will form an air lock and one door cannot be opened unless the other is closed.

A prisoner will be strapped into the chair, as in electrocutions, and a jar filled with hydrochloric acid will be placed under the chair.

Directly above the jar will be a rack containing five pellets of cyanide of potassium. After the doors are locked and sealed an electric button will split the pellets into the acid.

The first inhalations of the resulting cyanide-hydrochloric acid gas will cause unconsciousness and death will follow almost immediately. Then an exhaust fan will drive the gas out through a special flue through the prison roof. The doors cannot be opened until the gas is exhausted.

Governor's Porto Rico Palace Next to Oldest

La Fortaleza, the Governor's Palace, is next to the oldest house in Porto Rico. Its huge towers and connecting galleries were completed before 1540. Its treasure vaults extend below the sea and here were stored, until they could be shipped to Spain, the cargoes of gold and silver gathered from Mexico and South America in the early days of Spanish occupation.

Historic frescoes, fine mirrors and rare stained glass adorn the Governor's Palace; doors, screens and other parts of native wood are rich with the patina of age. The large room extending across the entire front of the palace was known as the "throne room" under Spanish rule, because here were held audiences with the governor general, the direct representative of the Spanish throne.

Beyond the Governor's Palace looms the great cathedral, the burial place of Ponce de Leon, founder of San Juan. Near by is Casa Blanca, built by his children, and said to be the oldest continuously inhabited house in North America.—New York Times.

Taxless Heaven Is Sought by Millionaires

News dispatches saying that two of Canada's richest citizens were contemplating moving to the Channel Islands have directed public attention to that group of British Isles. On one of them, Sark, no taxes are levied, and the only duty exacted of man is that he work on the roads two days a year. There are no automobiles or divorces and unemployment is unheard of. The island is ruled by a "queen," Mrs.
